The class learning environment should be seen as a key element of adaptation for effective learning. Displays therefore serve three main functions:

- Working walls within the classroom that act as an aide memoir in terms of prior learning
- Celebrations of work along the school corridors that encourages the children to be proud of their work
- Pastoral displays that support consistent good practice across the school.

Working Walls

Working walls are an area to display key information as a unit of study is taught to support pupils in their learning. To support pupils in their learning we would expect this added to and referred to in each lesson and have a consistent format to support pupils orientate.

Core Subjects

Every class has been provided with a mixture of white boards and traditional display boards. The priority should be given to core subjects with a consistent design used:

Key Focus	Modelled Example/ Key Features (In English)
Vocab
	Grammar Focus Support / Challenge (In Mathematics)

Every class will also have a phonic map to ensure that this skill is continually referenced.

Non-core subjects

All classes will have additional working walls for the majority of the subjects that are taught within the class with a slightly simpler layout.

Key Focus	Learning
Vocab

In addition to the vocabulary, the aim of these working walls is to help build the learners understanding of the unit content over time. This can be achieved in a number of ways including:

- Creating a timeline
- Building a mind-map
- Enlarging the Knowledge Organiser
- Modelling key examples

However, it is key that this is mixture of pictures and words to support all learners within the class.

Reception working walls are based upon their flipcharts for each lessons.

Celebration Walls

The school has two main types:

- Subject leader walls where each subject leader is responsible for displaying a range of work from across the school, changing annually.
- Phase displays where phase leaders aim to showcase examples of learning (including home learning) from across their phase which would expect to be change at least twice a year

In both cases, the display would require a general title, first names wherever possible and neat presentation.

It is worth noting that Teaching Assistants may need to support with this as teachers can no longer be asked to put up or take down displays as part of their terms and conditions.

Pastoral Displays

These serve to communicate key messages that we think are important for the children’s welfare:

- Visual timetables – these would be a legally required adaptation for certain children and are likely to benefit all.
- Emotion Pegs/Zones of Regulation – to enable pupils to be aware of their emotions and report if they are scared or worried (as there is no ribbon to attach these to)
- Star of the Day – Both in class and in the school Reception, there should be a daily opportunity to complement each other.
- Class rules – these should be easily displayed so all are clear on expectations
- British Values Bingo – where we aim to highlight links between our curriculum and British Values.
